ABSTRACT

The Public Education Committee of the Georgia Water and Pollution Control Association will present a review of its program designed to educate its members in the art of relating to the public. News media relations, adopt-a-school/youth conference, sludge education, water industry promotion, and other community relations - building programs will be reviewed. The presentation will be highlighted by a "simulated society" demonstration during which a real-life environmental problem will be addressed in a creative way by the conference participants.
